As the holistic development of individual is the main aim of all the curricular as well as co-curricular activities in the college, numerous opportunities and experiences are provided to the students. Such activities have a positive impact on students' emotional, social and interpersonal development.

By working together with other individuals, students learn to negotiate, communicate, manage conflicts and lead others.

Various events held in college are planned, compered/anchored by students. So the students learn planning, thinking, time management, academic and social competence.

Events organized by the students are guided by the faculty/mentors. Thus, students learn to plan, organize and conduct events at institutional level.

4. Classroom Teaching Learning Situations Along With Teacher And Peer Feedback

In the process of micro-teaching i.e. core teaching skill, the ideas communicated should be expressed lucidly so that it's easy for students to remember.

Giving peer feedback on their classroom teaching and core teaching skill, can help them grow as professionals. Giving feedback is a good way to let them understand their strengths and shortcomings in teaching and to help them to overcome the shortcomings.
